Netflix is focusing on kids and family shows, movies

Erin Jensen
USA TODAY

The streaming service is stepping up its output of kids and family movies and series to fend off competition from newer kid-friendly streaming services such as Disney+. It's also emphasizing original content over borrowed (but popular) series from Nickelodeon ("iCarly" and "Avatar: The Last Airbender") and Disney Jr. ("Sofia the First.") Netflix says it will release more than 50 new original movies and TV shows aimed at kids and families this year.

Last week, Netflix plated up "Waffles + Mochi," starring a pair of cuisine-curious puppets and former first lady Michelle Obama, who plays a grocery store owner. And the feature film "Yes Day," starring Jennifer Garner and Edgar Ramirez as parents who give in to their kids' every desire for one day, remains in Netflix's U.S. top 10 list more than a week after its March 12 release.

College graduate said she appreciates how CHamorus take care of each other as family.

"We treat friends and sometimes strangers just like family," Lizama said. "It has instilled the importance of being good to and taking of people whether they are blood family or not."

Lizama is a small business owner of an online retail store called Hafa Gear. They sell Guam T-shirts and gifts online and at various island festivals in San Diego, such as CHamoru Cultural Fest and Pacific Islander Festival Association events. She started the business in 2017.

"I started this business because I was so homesick that if I saw anything that represented Guam, I wanted to get it. I also wanted to make it affordable," Lizama said. "I wanted to be a store that CHamorus can go to when they wanted to buy something that represented our culture."

In 2019, Lizama's brother and cousins had opened a restaurant called Islander Grill located in Lemon Grove, California, in San Diego County.

"I have a display of some of my products located in their restaurant. The CHamoru people here in San Diego have been huge supporters of our businesses. We are proud to serve and represent our CHamoru culture in food, clothing and gifts. We are even more proud representing Guam during CHamoru Month," Lizama said.

Lizama believes CHamoru Month is important because it is a dedicated time to represent the rich culture of Guam. The community can display its heritage through food, dance, fun and togetherness.

"Growing up from elementary to high school, we always built huts and had fun events during CHamoru Month," she said. "It taught us the importance of our heritage and to always celebrate it and pass it along. It reinforces the importance of loving where you come from. You can share your memories and what you were taught with others, especially here in the mainland."

Lizama misses her family back on island and fun, short drive to beaches. She had been coping with homesickness by calling her family via FaceTime and by asking them to send some Guam snacks.

"Growing up in Guam has taught me to be a strong, proud and loyal citizen," Lizama said. "I can stand tall and be proud of any path I take in life. We take pride in all we do, and that is important."

Eddie Izzard co-wrote as well as stars in 'Six Minutes to Midnight'

The beginnings of British actor-comedian Eddie Izzard's career in show business happened without any comedy. He dipped his feet into it as a school boy, playing small dramatic roles, but learned to attract attention on the stage by speaking his lines a bit faster than everyone else. Upon discovering "Monty Python's Flying Circus" when he was about 13, he decided he wanted to get laughs, and eventually progressed through sketch comedy, then street comedy, and finally standup. His next jump, in his 30s, brought him into film acting ("Velvet Goldmine," "The Cat's Meow"), and a return to drama, but he kept on doing the standup.

There were more films - he had a major role in "Victoria & Abdul" - and a recurring part in the TV series "Hannibal." But having honed his writing skills on standup material over the years, he's also wanted to try script writing. The first film to come out of that de-south. Sirius is the head of Canis Major the Big Dog and that triangle of stars below Sirius is the Dog's hind legs. To the left of Canis Major and extending south is a sweep of stars that now make the constellation Puppis the Stern of the Great Ship Argo Navis.

Canopus, the second brightest star, is another easy find in the southwest. Canopus is the brightest and westernmost star of Carina the Keel of the ship. The rest of the Keel lies low above the southern horizon. Above the Keel is a ragged circle of stars that we call Vela the Sails.

The Great Ship Argo Navis used to be the sky's largest constellation, but it was broken into smaller pieces to make stellar navigation more precise. The parts are easier to see, however, if you view them as a single ship. There's no bow, supposedly it was lost in the crashing rocks, and the ship sails silently backwards across our spring southern skies.

In the missing bow is an awesome star called Eta Ca-rinae. Although it can't be seen with the unaided eye now, in the mid-1800s, it was the sky's third-brightest star. Eta Carinae is huge and extremely unstable and it has probably already become a supernova. Who knows, the light from the explosion may reach us in your lifetime.

Guam's spring skies are awesome. We've got famous constellations, bright stars, planets and the largest ship in the universe. Don't miss it.

Pam Eastlick is the Star Lady.
