Biden considering new pause on paying back student loans

By Nancy Cook Bloomberg

WASHINGTON — President Joe Biden is considering extending a pause on student loan repayments for several more months, as well as forgiving $10,000 in student loan debt per borrower, according to people familiar with the matter, as he seeks to appeal to young voters ahead of the November midterms.

The current moratorium on student loan payments expires Aug. 31, and a fresh pause could extend either through the end of 2022 or until next summer, the people said. Biden told reporters last week that he hoped to decide on an extension by the end of August.

Debt forgiveness may follow the extension, but the president hasn't reached a final decision on either move, the people said. Biden has been weighing appeals from progressives to forgive large

CALLS TO CANCEL: Advocates call on President Joe Biden to sign an executive order to cancel student debt on June 15, 2021, in Washington, D.C. Paul Morigi/Getty Images for We The 45 Million amounts of student loan debt almost since entering office, and the extended deliberations have frustrated some advocates.

The people asked not to be identified discussing internal White House deliberations. A White House spokesman said Biden and his team are still assessing their options and no decision has been made.

It's unclear if the approach will appease civil rights organizations like the NAACP, progressive Democratic lawmakers and a swathe of powerful labor unions that have pressed Biden to forgive $50,000 per borrower. The plan is intended to appeal to voters under age 30, whose enthusiasm - or lack thereof - in November could be key to determining whether Democrats retain control of the House and Senate.

The president is intent on ensuring any student loan forgiveness doesn't benefit high-income people, so the administration is likely to cap eligibility somewhere between $125,000 and $150,000 in annual income, one of the people said.

Biden has neared a decision on student loan forgiveness at least three times in the last several months, according to one Democrat close to the White House. Yet concerns about escalated inflation have complicated the discussions, preventing Biden and his top aides from moving forward with an announcement.

Although Biden's top economic aides have argued student loan forgiveness will not fuel inflation, White House officials have been reluctant to hand Republicans any additional talking points. The opposition party has sought to portray the administration as flooding the economy with money and thereby adding to inflationary pressure.

US may need $7B for monkeypox response, White House estimates

WASHINGTON (The Washington Post) — The Biden administration privately estimated to Congress this month that it may need nearly $7 billion to mount a response to the nation's monkeypox outbreak that matches "the scope and urgency of the current situation."

The funding estimate, the details of which were contained in a memo addressed to President Joe Biden and obtained by The Washington Post, reflected early talks among congressional Democrats and White House officials in pursuit of a spending package that could boost the availability of monkeypox tests, vaccine doses and treatments.

The amount did not mark a formal request for aid to Congress. Rather, it was one of a series of options reflecting various amounts that could fund varying levels of federal mitigation efforts. White House aides recently presented the ideas at the request of Democratic leaders on the Senate's top health-focused committee, according to the memo. A Democratic aide, who spoke on the condition of anonymity to describe the private conversations, confirmed the funding details to The Post.

The Biden administration also called for as much as $31.4 billion in new funds to combat the coronavirus pandemic, as it seeks to ensure the government has the resources necessary to purchase more treatments, testing and vaccines this year.

Feds want meth dealer to get 25 years

By Nick Delgado
nick@postguam.com

Federal prosecutors want a convicted methamphetamine dealer to spend 25 years in the U.S. Bureau of Prison for his crime.

James Rumbaua Damaso, 53, who was found guilty of having 139.1 grams of meth on him when federal agents pulled him over back in 2019, is scheduled to be sentenced before District Court of Guam Chief Judge Frances Tydingco-Gatewood today.

He is convicted of possession of 50 or more grams of methamphetamine hydrochloride with intent to distribute.

The U.S. Attorney's Office seeks a 25-year prison term followed by 10 years of supervised release.

Defense attorney William Gavras asked the court for a sentence of 15 years.

Gavras noted in court documents that Damaso will be in his late 70s even if the court sentences him to the minimum range of 282 months in prison.

"Before he reaches 77, Mr. Damaso will either be dead or well past the age of criminality," said Gavras in his sentencing memorandum filed in court. "Unlike stateside inmates, Mr. Damaso will do his time isolated from his family. His father and his three children live in Guam. They will likely remain thousands of miles from him throughout the incarceration and perhaps for the rest of his life. His ex-wife describes him as a 'good person' who has a close relationship with his three children."

Smuggle drugs

Damaso was accused of working with Jeffrey Baldonado to smuggle drugs into Guam through the mail.

Baldonado has since taken a plea deal with the government, admitting to attempted possession of methamphetamine hydrochloride with intent to distribute.

In 2019, investigators intercepted a package containing 1,800 grams of meth addressed to Baldonado in Latte Heights, Mangilao. The drugs were replaced with sham and agents inserted a GPS tracking device inside, court documents state.

Authorities tracked the package to a residence in Dededo.

Baldonado told the feds that Damaso told him to "take it and get rid of it" after being given one of the four bags of sham, documents state.

Damaso also was convicted of separate federal drug charges in 2009, Post files state.

Autopsies scheduled for men shot dead in Yigo

By Nick Delgado
nick@postguam.com

The autopsies for the two men who were found dead at a ranch in Yigo last month are tentatively set to be performed this weekend.

The Office of the Attorney General has been working to secure a medical examiner from off-island to conduct the examinations.

No arrests or new details have been released from Guam police detectives this week.

On July 22, Dong Yi Wang, 43, and Ba-hung Dung Nguyen, 24, were found with gunshot wounds at a farm area along Chalan Arendo in Yigo.

Authorities said they found a firearm at the scene.

Criminal investigators said the search for a person of interest is ongoing.

► CRIME SCENE: Police tape is seen at the entrance of a farm along Chalan Arendo in Yigo. Officers responded to a reported shooting July 22 and found two men dead at the scene. Nick Delgado/The Guam Daily Post
