Research Matters: Fighting cancer with research rooted in island communities

By Rachael Leon Guerrero, PhD, and Yvette Paulino, PhD
For Pacific Daily News

The University of Guam Cancer Research Center houses several key research and data collection entities, including the Guam Cancer Registry, the Pacific Regional Central Cancer Registry, and the Pacific Island Partnership for Cancer Health Equity, with a shared mission: to improve cancer outcomes through locally driven research.

A key message from the Cancer Research Center is the lifesaving value of early detection. Annual screenings can identify cancer in its earliest stages, when treatment is most effective. The call to the community is clear: Don't delay your checkups.

On Guam, CHamoru and Filipino women are among the most proactive in getting screened and receiving treatment early.

However, data shows a critical disparity among Micronesian women from the outer islands, who are less likely to have regular screenings—often resulting in later-stage diagnoses and poorer outcomes.

Free breast and cervical cancer screenings are available through the Guam Department of Public Health and Social Services' Guam Breast and Cervical Cancer Early Detection Program.

Tracking, reporting cancer data

There are currently three certified registrars on the island providing tracking and data collection to support local cancer research. Cancer data collection at the UOG Cancer Research Center is locally funded through the Healthy Futures Fund and tobacco tax revenue.

Both the Guam Cancer Registry and the Guam office of the Pacific Regional Central Cancer Registry compile data by ethnicity, age, and gender, providing insights essential to targeted cancer prevention and care.

Comprehensive reports

COURTESY OF UNIVERSITY OF GUAM

Kulu, the inflatable colon, is used by the Pacific Island Partnership for Cancer Health Equity Community Outreach Core at the University of Guam to raise awareness of colorectal cancer and promote screening.

are issued every five years, the most recent, published in 2022, which used data from 2013–2017, identified the top cancers on Guam as breast, lung and bronchus, colorectal, prostate, and liver.

The report showed that lung and bronchus cancer was the leading cause of cancer-related deaths; and while breast cancer rates on Guam are lower than on the U.S. mainland, rates of cervical and liver cancer are significantly higher.

Data entry for 2023 cases is now complete, and a new five-year report (2018–2022) is in development.

Research collaborations

Through the U54 Pacific Island Partnership for Cancer Health Equity partnership between UOG and the University of Hawai'i Cancer Center, UOG researchers have attracted over $171 million in grants and published 157 peer-reviewed studies. Besides us co-leading the grant, eight other UOG faculty and administrators support it.

Recent cancer research projects led by UOG faculty include:

- Obesity and Cancer Survivors: This year, Tanisha Aflague, PhD, is concluding a pilot intervention study to reduce obesity among female breast cancer survivors in Guam and Hawai'i.

- Breast Cancer Risk: Grazyna Badowski, PhD, explored the role of clinical risk factors and breast density in breast cancer screenings to identify trends in the prevalence of breast cancer risk among Asian and Pacific Islander women.

- Botanicals and Cancer:

Sahena Ferdosh, PhD, investigated bioactive compounds in poha (Physalis peruviana) and soursop (Annona muricata) for their potential in combating a key bacterial pathogen associated with colorectal cancer.

- Betel Nut Use: PIPCHE researchers developed educational campaigns, including a school-based curriculum and social media outreach, to reduce betel nut and tobacco use, substances linked to oral and liver cancers.

Representation in cancer research and data collection matters. Including Pacific Islanders in cancer data and studies is vital to reducing health disparities and investing in health care solutions tailored for island communities.

Research at UOG

The Guam Cancer Research Center is supported by UOG's Office of Research and Sponsored Programs, which oversees grant acquisition and research initiatives across UOG's nine research centers.

In March 2025, UOG was designated a Research College and University by the Carnegie Classification, recognizing institutions with significant research activity. This places UOG among just 216 institutions nationwide with this designation and reaffirms its leadership in advancing research throughout Micronesia.

ORSP manages more than $60 million in awards annually to support research that strengthens the region's health, environment, and cultural resilience. For more information, visit www.uog.edu/research or learn more about the Guam Cancer Research Center at pipche.org.

Rachael Leon Guerrero, PhD, and Yvette Paulino, PhD, are co-principal investigators for the Pacific Island Partnership for Cancer Health Equity at the University of Guam.
