Jiu-Jitsu Guam” during the transition.

He made clear that the Guam academy had no involvement in the alleged conduct and that such behavior does not reflect who they are or what they stand for.

The institution on Guam was built on accountability, discipline, and the deliberate creation of a safe, professional environment for students and families. Those standards are not negotiable.

That is leadership under scrutiny.

In my professional career, I have worked alongside respected leaders—former Gov. Eddie Baza Calvo, chief of staff Frank Arriola, former senator and attorney Thomas J. Fisher, and most recently in my current service alongside Lt. Gov. Josh Tenorio.

Leadership at that level is not defined by title. It is defined by clarity, discipline, moral steadiness, and the willingness to protect the institution entrusted to one’s care.

Measured against that standard, Professor Carbullido’s decision reflects stewardship over convenience and principle over affiliation.

Separating from an affiliation does not diminish what was built. If anything, it makes the foundation clearer.

The progress of the athletes here—the development of young competitors, the strengthening of seasoned ones, myself included—is not the product of a logo. It is the direct result of the environment Professor Carbullido created. The discipline. The preparation. The expectation of excellence.

Affiliation brands can change in an instant.

Culture does not. Leadership does not.

What stands here was built deliberately, through long hours, hard rounds, accountability, and care for the people inside those walls.

And when tested, Professor Carbullido’s leadership did not retreat. It held.

Character outlasts branding. Principle outlasts partnership.

And real leadership, built over time and proven under pressure, stands.
