Student Body Association president, plans to study business administration while pursuing a minor in logistics.

As they prepare to leave Guam, the athletes also recognized the significance of becoming role models for younger players hoping to follow a similar path.

“Going to college already feels like a blessing, but being able to go and play a sport I love is just, honestly, out of this world for me,” Riffey said. “I really think being able to come back and ... help teams and help inspire the younger generation will be something that I ... definitely look forward to.”

Mafnas hopes their accomplishments encourage younger athletes to take chances and pursue opportunities outside their comfort zones.

“I hope this gives younger generations the courage to put themselves out there and to take the risk of trying new things,” Mafnas said. “All of us have a fear of being unsure (about) going out and playing at such a high level ... but if we didn't take a risk ... I don't think we would be here today.”

Sablan said the responsibility of being watched by younger players serves as motivation.

“Having that pressure of the younger generation watching me will really help me to push myself harder to become better just for them,” Sablan said. “They say pressure builds diamonds, so I feel like that pressure is going to help me to really focus on everything I can do to become better.”

Aldis stressed that success at the next level requires dedication both on the field and in the classroom.

“If you're going to work hard on the field, you have also got to work hard academically,” Aldis said. “[To] younger generations: just care about your classes. Keep your grades up. Make sure you're doing well. Don't slip up, and you can do anything after that.”

On a lighter note, the athletes also reference what food they will miss most after leaving the island given Guam's relationship with food culture that they will be leaving behind. Riffey drew cheers from the crowd with her answer of Spam (the Guam version – since she has been hearing that Spam is different stateside), while Sablan chose chicken kelaguen, Mafnas selected kãdu, and Aldis, representing his Pohnpeian roots with an FSM dish mention, said he would miss ‘fish and kon’.

With their signatures now official, the quartet joins a growing list of Guam rugby athletes advancing to the collegiate ranks, carrying both their talents and island culture with them as they begin the next chapter of their journeys.

The four rugby players heading to the states are joined by family and friends during their signing to play college ball this fall.
